From Fort Kent to Kittery, Mainers depend on public service workers for their safety, health, education, child care and hundreds of other vital services that help build safe and healthy communities.

Public service workers in Maine include:

- Biologists, geologists, entomologists, chemists, hydrologists and environmental services workers all keeping your food and drinking water safe, and your lakes and rivers clean.
- Forest technicians ensuring that Maine’s forestland is well-managed.
- Dairy, egg, poultry and seed inspectors verifying the quality of your food supply.
- Humane agents standing up for the fair treatment of all animals in Maine.
- Park rangers helping you make the most of your visits to Maine’s state parks and public lands.
- Personal care attendants making it possible for thousands of Mainers to live independently in their own homes.
- Children’s services workers providing diagnostic screenings for newborns through age 5 so they can make the most of their public education.
- Blood services workers ensuring Maine’s blood supply is there when you need it.

By joining together in MSEA-SEIU, public service workers are uniting with the families we serve, advocates, community leaders and elected leaders to set the best standards for public services and to make our communities safe and healthy.
